The Lucas Farm House is a two story frame structure two bays long by one deep with a two story rear wing. This house has a gable roof on both sections some parts still retain wood shingles. In the rear wing is an interior brick chimney. The exterior of the house is covered with white shingles. Across the facade is a one story porch with brackets on the support posts. There is a central entrance flanked by a window. Although most of the early sash has been removed and unlaced by 1/1 there are still several windows that have 6/6 sash. The house has a stone foundation and a cellar. The roof has a box cornice of plain design on all sections.

Next to the house is an early 20th century barn of frame construction with board and batten siding. The early wood shingle roof has a metal covering.

SPECIFIC DATESBUILDER/ARCHITECT

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

This house is representative of a rural farmhouse of a tenant or small farmer. The rear wing of the house could have been the original structure and quite possibly be much older than the present facade.
